Lowes Wealth Management announces a 12-month return of 44.8% from its value investment portfolio

BEIJING, Oct 30, 2006 – China-based Lowes Wealth Management announced today that its international equities portfolio has delivered an impressive performance figure of 44.8% over its first year of trading.

Lowes Wealth Management (LWM) actively manages an equity portfolio of US, UK, European and Asian companies. LWM is focused on performance, flexibility and security and employs a rigorous value-based investment methodology, invented by Benjamin Graham, the tutor of Warren Buffett. Value investment methods have empowered LWM's analyst team to deliver this startling first-year result. LWM's impressive success, having significantly outperformed all major markets, is driven by its strong in-house analysis capability.

LWM's managing director, Justin Lowes said, "The important point is that we have achieved this market-beating return for our clients whilst maintaining a considerably lower level of risk than that seen in almost all major markets."

LWM strongly believes in performance-based fees with no minimum investment period, no lock-in period and no penalty for early-exit, thus founding the core values of the company on a client-centric approach. LWM has a rigorous research process, only considering companies with a minimum market capitalization of USD500 million. All LWM's trading activities are regulated in London.

LWM has quickly grown over the first year of its investment product's trading. Lowes is confident looking forward. "Our focus on companies with undervalued tangible assets will continue to enable our clients to enjoy superior returns, whilst at the same time protecting them from losses in the event of a market correction."
